

Kohn's Kosher Deli Dihadapkan Tuntutan Hukum Hampir $150,000: Apa Yang Terjadi?

Description

Kohn's Kosher Deli Faces Lawsuit Over Unpaid Bills

Kohn's Kosher Deli, a popular kosher butcher, grocery, and catering business in Illinois, is facing a lawsuit from a food distributor for nearly $150,000 in unpaid bills. The distributor, Mid Town Distribution, claims that Kohn's has failed to pay for goods delivered to the deli, resulting in almost 20 unpaid transactions between March and April.

Closure of Kohn's Kosher Deli

Recently, Kohn's Kosher Deli, the region's last old-school deli, closed its doors. The closure has raised concerns among the community about the availability of kosher meat, catering, and dining options in the area. The Vaad Hoer of St. Louis, which provides kosher certification to Kohn's, has emphasized the need for these services in St. Louis.

Efforts to Reopen Kohn's Kosher Deli

Despite the closure of Kohn's Kosher Deli, there are efforts underway to potentially reopen the business. However, a statement from the Vaad Hoer of St. Louis suggests that there are several practical and legal issues that need to be addressed before a reopening can occur. The involvement of multiple parties is required to resolve these issues.

- The business was founded in 1963 by Simon and Bobbie Kohn, Holocaust survivors.
- The Kohns' adult children, Lenny Kohn and Rosemary Kohn Cooper, previously operated the deli.
- New owners took over the business in 2022.

Future of Kohn's Kosher Deli

The future of Kohn's Kosher Deli remains uncertain as discussions continue regarding a possible reopening. Key stakeholders, including the current owners and the Vaad Hoer of St. Louis, are working to address the challenges that have arisen. Full payment of outstanding bills is crucial for the deli to resume operations successfully.
